Howard Woody : South Carolina Postcards, Volume IX:: Anderson County (Postcard History) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised South Carolina Postcards, Volume IX:: Anderson County (Postcard History):

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Really appreciate this book By William R. Allen I have referred to this book many times and have recommended it to several people. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Great for the images, but... By CJ While this book is fantastic for the images in it, when it came to the descriptions, it felt somewhat hastily thrown together. I found one large error in one of the captions that could have easily been fact checked which made me question the accuracy of other captions for images I knew less (or in some cases, nothing) about. Ultimately, if all you're looking for is pictures, you'll be happy with this book. If you're looking for the story behind the pictures, pick this up from a library and be prepared to find other sources for the actual information.

Revolutionary War general Robert Anderson is honored today in northwestern South Carolina through two namesakes: Anderson County and its county seat, also called Anderson. The town was the Palmetto State's first with long-run electrical power, and it therefore earned the early nickname of "The Electric City." Smaller towns in the county, including Belton, Honea Path, Piedmont, Pelzer, Pendleton, and Williamston, developed around depots serving the Greenville and Columbia Railroad.

About the Author In his ninth volume of South Carolina Postcards, Carolina historian and avid postcard collector Howard Woody showcases more than 200 images of Anderson County from the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The people, events, and structures forever entwined in the Anderson's storied past come alive through detailed captions, which will spark the memories of longtime residents while introducing the county's origins to younger generations and newcomers alike.
